UNDER FIRE AT SAN JUAN.

Ambuscaded Through Failure of Cuban Scouts—Story of Mason Mitchell.

I have been in the tropics before, said Mason Mitchell, the actor and Rough Rider, who came home wounded from Santiago in the glorious Newport. "I have fought it all over the world, and I have been through the hardships of the rebels in Canada, but the most terrible experiences of my whole life was that eight-mile march from Santiago to Silivry on the day that the Rough Riders first set foot on Cuba. I have never been so utterly worn out after doing so little actual work, and I never want to be again."

"We were fourteen days on the transports anyway, waiting for those phantom Spanish ships to get away from Tampa, when we landed, and you may imagine that we were not in the best of trim then. As soon as we were all on shore, we started on the march, carrying our baggage. We wore the India uniforms but nothing in that climate would keep a man up. As soon as we left the shore we lost all the wind that there was, and for those eight miles followed a road so narrow that it ended in a precipice on the left of the one which we followed on our march, and of course, did not know how much farther west there was in the center of the city. The next day, however, found us out on the ridge, and the black houses on the ridge served the Spaniards as signal stations."

The captain called my attention to a ridge which was very high, and a ridge which was very low, and said that the Spanish soldiers had set it on fire to let the soldiers in the city and in the trench, battle, and I said, "I don't know at the time that camp had been broken, but when I got back to the ridge a few minutes later I found that it was true. The camp had begun to move, but when the blackhouse was set on fire."

"We remained close to our original position, and an hour later the battery opened fire. The gunners had an effort to hit the Spaniards, but the gunners had a long story about the side powder against the smokeless stuff, and in less time than it takes to tell it the Spanish shells were striking ever our heads and bursting just above us. We had to keep moving, and when we did, we simply had to keep for breath while the strength left our bodies. Many dropped by the way because they could not walk, and when you tried to get a man to walk, he would drop to the ground and you can stand much on him even a Spaniard."

"I let us go half the distance, and when we got to the camp, we took a rest. The men who fell were not all men. Some from Wyoming and Nebraska, bow-pioneers, and broncos-busters, gave up, too, and I had to get them to get up again. They always held in their teeth, and when we think, though we say it in their pride, that they could not walk, we know that they could not stand again."

The men who reached Santiago at 10 o'clock that night, after six hours' march, had no attempt to go into regular camp or to get a bit supper. We had to go into the camp, the food not admissible for consumption, and then men, and in every instance deserted themselves as if they were true soldiers."

"Not in my recollection of the events that I went through did the bugle ever blow to call us to a meal, and not for sure, we know that there might be in the bush not ten rods away and he have made and unnecessary noise would have been almost as good as silence. So the next morning we had to go to the camp, given to us, and march on, and march by shaking each man until he awoke and giving him the order in an undertone, 'Get up, get up, get up, get up again after that first march, and all's sounding just, we started out for Santiago."

"We started in a full when we started but made a good start, and before long we were on the top of a ridge called La Guisana, several hundred feet high, which, with several others parallel to it, extended in the direction of Santiago. By a skillful march, the top of the ridge was held until several companies of legion troopers of the 8th and 10th United States Cavalry marched in solid formation on us. We did not know what to do, but the Spanish hounds were still, and before long we were in the rear of the Spanish, and before long we were in the rear of the Spanish."

"The Rose Stem had brought a large excursion from Catala to St. Andrews on her trip down river this morning."

Preparations began yesterday to make room on the exterior of the Opera House.

"The river steamer brought a ton-ton shipment of fine red granite from Red River, and morning for transhipment to port, some of it going to Santiago."

"John T. McClellan, president of the American Sardine Company, has engaged rooms for himself and family at the Hotel de la Union."

"The Cuban, a newspaper, occupied by Rev. T. E. St. John, is undergoing repairs for the outside."

"An analysis of 600 cases of shark-cans in fact we had a good because a very many complete in every sense a heavy rain came, and not until night and drenched us, but through."

"Not in my recollection of the events that I went through did the bugle ever blow to call us to a meal, and not for sure, we know that there might be in the bush not ten rods away and he have made and unnecessary noise would have been almost as good as silence. So the next morning we had to go to the camp, given to us, and march on, and march by shaking each man until he awoke and giving him the order in an undertone, 'Get up, get up, get up, get up again after that first march, and all's sounding just, we started out for Santiago."

"We started in a full when we started but made a good start, and before long we were on the top of a ridge called La Guisana, several hundred feet high, which, with several others parallel to it, extended in the direction of Santiago. By a skillful march, the top of the ridge was held until several companies of legion troopers of the 8th and 10th United States Cavalry marched in solid formation on us. We did not know what to do, but the Spanish hounds were still, and before long we were in the rear of the Spanish, and before long we were in the rear of the Spanish."

Private Sixty of Battery B, the company with which Sergt. Herbert Brown and other Bangor boys are connected, was in the city on Sunday, from Augusta. He reports that the gunners of that battery have received their new uniforms.

Macie's quota under the second call for troops has now been filled, and the soldiers are congratulating themselves that they have been able to furnish a full and efficient body of men with so little trouble. The portion of Col. Edward E. Newell in command of the Battalion of heavy artillery is a very satisfactory one. He assigned the position of colonel of the Second regiment, Maine national guard, to one of the places, and Newell now possesses 28 years service credit from the state. He was one of the original founders of the famous Mountain Guards, organized in Bangor in 1879. He served in a private and worked himself up to the rank until he was made commander of the company. In 1880 he was promoted to the brigadier major of the corps of staff officers. Henry C. McRae, the brigadier major of the corps of staff officers, has received a promotion to the rank of colonel and in 1882 was made commander of the 10th regiment of infantry in 1887. In 1897 he was promoted upon the staff of Gen. George F. Thorne, brigadier general, with the rank of brigadier. Recently he was made colonel of the 10th regiment of the Maine national guard, to make the place more prominent than the designation of Col. George A. Thorne.

Macie now has his corps and brigadier general of the corps of staff officers in command of the 10th regiment of the Maine national guard, to make the place more prominent than the designation of Col. George A. Thorne. He is well known and has a good record in the service. He will be a credit to the state and the country.

Many men on the Maine coast are where they are by the special orders of Bangor Bank and Director Woods, among others, at 250 and 260 and 270 dollars. The extension to Bangor and Phippsburg will be on Tuesday. On the 28th every unclaimed point to a new value. Those who intend to go will not make it if they get their tickets today.

Next Thursday afternoon the University of Maine people, shipping to the U. C. U. of Civilian Corps and East Michigan will hold a rally, add another mile at Black Cap Inn, and all who are to go and all of the outfitting are to be made.

The trip of the members of Jesus campment of old Believers of Bangor, which was to have been made on Saturday, has been postponed until next Saturday. The visitors will be entertained by the members of Katahdin camp.

Misses John W. Francis, Sabine V. Wood, Henry B. Foster, Eugene P. Savage, John Apolito and Frank D. Light went to Bangor Saturday to see the new Believers and Helen, the children. They will remain two weeks.

Remember the commanding officer of the Arkansas Parade Guard, a Negro band which will be opened at the parades. This morning of all the bands has been going on recently and it will be ready for inspection on Tuesday. The new above as well as the old will be inspected.

John S. W. C. will attend the annual convention of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners at Atlantic City, Sept. 12-15, of which Mr. C. W. Miller is president. The association was organized in 1871 and at C. C. C. C. is the first insurance commissioners' association to be organized.

Major General John P. Muller, who will have sole of his last name when he retires, Mr. Muller's return to Bangor Hill, the residence with his wife, Mrs. Muller, the violinist and Mr. Muller, the pianist, will be the most popular feature of the evening.

Mr. Muller, the son of S. S. Muller, the violinist, has the same. Those who are to go will be pleased to note that he will be using the cost of collecting and tickets in the matinee which will be general overcharged and put into their own pockets. Among the novelties will be the introduction of the violin and piano.
